HAROLD SHARP

Symbolic Drawings – Auragraphs

Harold Sharp started to investigate Spiritualism around 1930 and began to develop his mediumship. In Sharp's early childhood he used to see a monk and in later life he found the monk to be his guide, Brother Peter, who had lived in Vienna and, it is said, had been a healer who used rare herbs in his treatments. As a tribute to his guide Sharp cultivated his own herb garden.

The image of Brother Peter was captured by psychic artist Frank Leah and later by Coral Polge, showing a striking resemblance. Both of the original drawings are displayed in the Britten Memorial Museum at the Arthur Findlay College; below is the image by Frank Leah.

Harold came from a farming background, living with his father on their farm in Leicestershire. He was raised a Roman Catholic and when his father died Harold moved to London.

On his first day in London Harold visited Westminster Abbey and on coming out he saw Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's psychic museum and called in.<sup>17</sup> The secretary recommended the names of some mediums; he was careful not to give his name to the museum secretary or any of the mediums he would later visit. He went immediately to one of the mediums' addresses given by the secretary, Charles Gover Botham, whose guide was called Lily.<sup>18</sup>

Below is a quote from an article in Psychic News around 1980:

“Then Lily said, “You have your father’s watch but not your father’s chain.” That was true. Sharp had given his father’s watch-chain to his brother.

The guide next said, “Was your father a schoolmaster?” Up to that time, Sharp had been getting more and more amazed, but now he thought he had found a flaw. His father was a farmer – and looked like one.

Lily added: “He is not telling me he was a schoolmaster. But he is showing me a picture of a very big school, with all the little boys dressed in grey, and saying, ‘Those little devils always left the gates open’.”

This was very evidential. The farm owned by Sharp’s father adjoined a preparatory school. The boys used to walk across the ground, leaving all the gates open, causing endless confusion.

The sitting with Botham made Sharp think seriously about the case for Spiritualism.

Harold visited all the mediums whose names he had been given.

At his sitting with automatist Hester Dowden,<sup>19</sup> Sharp gave the fictitious name of Cyril Roper.”

In the early 1940s Sharp began to develop symbolic drawings, popularly known today as auragraphs, for which he later became well-known. An auragraph is basically a symbolic representation of one’s life, past, present and potential. Sharp was an early pioneer of this technique and generally produced his auragraphs within circles.

<sup>18</sup> Many years later Botham was charged with fraud, which came at a bad time. During the General Elections of 1945 and 1950 the Spiritualists’ National Union and other organisations submitted a questionnaire to candidates in the respective constituencies and 200 elected Members of the House of Commons gave unqualified support to a Fraudulent Mediums Bill.

“It was a case in which Charles Botham was convicted on 20th June, 1950, on three counts of false pretences. There were also two counts of conjuration under the Witchcraft Act, 1735. The jury was discharged from returning a verdict on them, so that, in fact, they never came before the court. What happened in that case was this. Botham persuaded a widow to place sums of money of the order of £1,000 and £500 on a chair, with the story that the spirit of her late husband would dematerialise them and apply the money to medical charities. The notes were not dematerialised, but, in a very material form, reached Mr. Botham’s own wallet. The charges under the Witchcraft Act were added in case the widow insisted that she believed her husband’s spirit was going to come into the room. The jury, as one would expect, were not concerned with that part of the case; they said they were quite sure that the whole show was a fraud.” See:—<http://hansard.millbanksystems.com/commons/1950/dec/01/fraudulent-mediums-bill>

HAROLD SHARP has developed a new phase of his mediumship. It is automatic drawing and colouring, the latest stage being the production of “graphs ” of the human aura executed in delicate colouring and intricate but rhythmic designs. These are produced at high speed by a medium who has never had an art lesson and cannot draw normally.

By means of his clairvoyance, Sharp has seen the spirit artist who is responsible for this new development. He is Chan Shih, a young modern Chinaman of about 30. This Chinaman had often been described to him by other mediums, but until these drawings began Sharp did not know of the reason for the spirit association.

In years gone by Harold Sharp discovered that when telephoning his friends he used to “doodle ” on the pad or scrap of paper. Then he noticed that, instead of being meaningless scribbling, he had drawn symbolic designs, some so beautiful that he was loath to destroy them.

In February last year he received as a gift a large book with “clear pages,” expertly bound and with gold lettering. The medium thought this was just the thing for his favourite quotations. Soon after that he was about to record a much-loved “pearl of wisdom” on the first page, when his pen began to weave discernible fascinating vignettes of caves, waterfalls and woodland vistas. These were repeated again and again, the designs taking definite shape and obviously containing hidden meanings.

Sometimes in the quietness of his seance room Sharp would receive clairaudiently the interpretation of the sketches.

One drawing was interpreted as:

“The harp-string shall break down the strong wall;
And the tree of wisdom
Shall dwarf the temple and pagoda,
And all mankind shall sing—
‘How lovely is our dwelling-place.’ ”

Then one day Harold Sharp heard clairaudiently these words, “Place colours at my service and I will place myself at yours.” Now, Sharp merely sits quietly, thinks of his guide and receives these coloured representations of the aura.

He is not in trance during this form of mediumship, but he never knows what the result will be. Sometimes he begins at the middle of the sheet, other times in one corner. The colours are done first and then the ink drawing is superimposed.

Even the most intricate “graphs” are executed usually in about an hour. The speediest has been 20 minutes and the largest, a “graph” of thousands of closely packed lines, took an hour and 20 minutes. The largest measures 26in. by 14in. The most recent results are in circular form with a diameter of about 10in.

He possesses about a hundred ink sketches and 30 coloured “graphs.” To interpret these “graphs” the Chinese guide takes control and gives their meaning.

Often in the past Sharp had been told by other mediums, “You will draw,” or “You will paint,” but knowing his inability to do anything of the kind normally he always replied, “That would be proof of spirit-world activity.”

He is quite convinced that these drawings do not originate in his subconscious mind. Sharp, a fervid supporter of Russia even in the days when his partisanship was difficult, points out that in all the hundreds of designs there has never been one hammer and sickle!

In around 1966 Sharp, then in his late 70s, visited Peking, where Chan Shih had lived and worked as a metal engraver; he saw the house where Chan Shih had lived. Sharp said a commune was named after Chan Shih, who had died in the Boxer Rising.

For over a quarter of a century Sharp worked at the Marylebone Spiritualist Association, founded in 1872, today known as the Spiritualist Association of Great Britain (SAGB). He was also programmed in the early days of the Arthur Findlay College.

In the 1970s Harold moved into a health home for elderly people in Golcar, Huddersfield, West Yorkshire. He died soon after his 90th birthday on February 22nd 1980.

FRANK LEAH – PSYCHIC ARTIST

An account of the development of Symbolic Drawings, later more popularly known as Auragraphs, through the mediumship of Harold Sharp was published in the October 2014 issue of the Pioneer. Below is a description of the early development of Frank Leah, who pioneered spirit portraits of family, friends and guides. We can note in the October issue a portrait of Sharp's guide, "Brother Peter", captured by Leah.

Frank Leah paved much of the ground for later psychic artist Coral Polge, who was told through automatic writing, according to her autobiography, "The Living Image", on page 30, that "one day I would take Frank Leah's place in Spiritualism."

ARTIST WHO DRAWS "SPIRIT" PICTURES A RARE FORM OF MEDIUMSHIP

By Horace Leaf, F.R.G.S.<sup>13</sup>

ART has long been a method by which the inhabitants of the beyond have communicated with us, but mediums for this special form of demonstration have been rare. Frequently it has been through inspired or "direct" music. Often it has been through what have become known as "spirit drawings." The latter have usually been beautiful but fantastic, owing, it is believed, to the spirit world having more than three dimensions. In endeavouring to convey to us something of the marvels and beauty of their world, the spirits have been compelled to resort to symbolism.

All through, however, there have been unseen intelligences who have endeavoured to inspire mediums to produce pictures which would be more easily appreciated by those too logically minded to be influenced by mysticism, and some truly wonderful supernormal results have been obtained. The remarkable paintings done through the late David Duguid rank among the best of these.<sup>14</sup> They were usually landscape. The Society for Psychical Research have on record a number of impressive pictures that bear all the marks of supernormal origin, but true portraits of departed friends have been rather scarce. There, is nevertheless, ample evidence that our unseen helpers have again been trying to exploit this field, in their effort to prove in every way their survival of bodily death.

During the last few months, at least one qualified artist has been exhibiting this form of mediumship in a very convincing manner. Mr. Frank Leah, journalist, cartoonist, assistant-editor and art editor in his time, of various well-known journals at home and abroad, has already won considerable recognition as being extraordinarily endowed with what may be termed supernormal portrait drawing and painting, and many bereaved souls have been gladdened by his work.

Mr. Leah has all the experience of art necessary for the work, and in selecting him as their instrument the spirit people have shown determination to recruit to their service one able to serve their purpose in the highest degree. Perhaps no one has been more astonished than this gentleman that he should have been practically coerced into this unusual branch of art. His method is different from that of the Bangs Sisters, who received their productions without having to use the pencil or palette, their striking portraits having been received through a form of mediumship allied to materialisation.

HOW IT IS DONE.

Mr. Leah works in the presence of his sitters, with a dim red light on his drawing board, and then awaits either the actual objective appearance of his spirit "sitter," or else a subjective vision of him or her. In some instances the spirit has shown a lively interest in trying to produce exactly the expression or attitude that the artist thinks most suitable, and occasionally he has had verbally to suggest that the spirit whose portrait is to be drawn shall do this or that, or explain why certain effects have been made.

I had an interview with Mr. Frank Leah to find out more about his mediumship, and found him deeply interested in the unexpected development of his art.

The first serious indication that he possessed an unusual sense of portrait painting occurred soon after returning from India, where he was occupied in journalistic and artistic pursuits. On arriving in England he became Art Editor of five journals, one of which was devoted to sport. One day the Editor asked him to produce the picture of a well-known personality who had never been photographed. Unable to get any assistance from portraits, Mr. Leah had finally to rely upon a verbal description of the man from the Editor and a friend. He then drew a full-length portrait of the subject, which was so accurate that it was published next day. The picture was said to have re-produced the man in his most characteristic mood, expression and dress, and aroused a great deal of interest.

There was an amusing aftermath. Mr. Leah met this man soon afterwards on a racecourse, and immediately recognised him from the portrait he had drawn. Somewhat taken aback at his own success, he ventured to congratulate the gentleman on the picture, and was amused to find his subject indignant that it should have been published without his consent. He told Mr. Leah what he would do to the artist if he met him, for taking such a liberty!

Inviting the indignant man to partake of some refreshments, Mr. Leah informed him who the artist was, and explained how the picture had been done. The gentleman was amazed, readily forgiving so remarkable an artist, and a close friendship was there and then formed between them.

Mr. Leah has been interested in scientific evidence of survival ever since, when a youth, he saw the spirit of his great uncle, who had been a vicar in Yorkshire. He had never seen the dead man, and was able to recognise him from an old portrait. The apparition was perfectly life-like, holding a Bible in its hand, and surrounded by a beautiful flame coloured aura.

Perhaps his first real spirit portrait was drawn in 1924. Whilst in London he heard a voice clairaudiently telling him to go home to Ireland. On arriving at his house he was delighted to meet an old friend, an army captain, who also had a keen psychic sense.

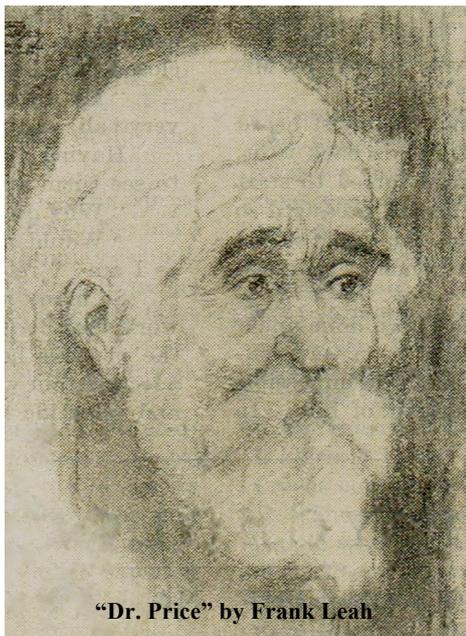

“Did you receive my mental call?” asked the Captain.

“Yes,” replied Mr. Leah. “It was accompanied by so powerful an impulse that I had to hurry home.”

The Captain had come to ask him to draw the portrait of an important Irish personality who had recently passed away. Mr. Leah had drawn a picture of this person on the charred walls of a billiard room in a hotel which had been almost destroyed by fire, and suggested that the Captain, and a friend who was with him, accompany him. The portrait on the wall had been done in a spirit of fun, and although good, hardly expressed what was desired by Mr. Leah’s client.

Whilst looking at the mural drawing, the artist heard clairaudiently a voice instruct him to turn his back to it, and as soon as he had done so, he seemed forced to start the portrait. In less than half-an-hour he had produced so vivid a likeness of the deceased man that the Captain and his friend, both of whom were devoted friends of the dead man, were reduced to tears!

The artist knew that the drawing had been done under spirit impulsion. In life the dead man had been very self-conscious at portrait sittings, and had made it impossible for Mr. Leah to draw a satisfactory portrait of him. In death he was evidently trying to undo this by assisting the artist in this novel and unexpected way.

After this experience the artist dabbled in portraying the deceased, and became deeply interested in spiritual healing through the well-known medium, Mrs. May Bird, and her celebrated control “Dr. Price.” However, it was not until the end of 1931 that the spirit world called insistently upon his mediumship, and he resolved to devote his time to their service. The spirit friends pointed out the value to both worlds that must inevitably come from an actual portrayal of the departed through such a high form of art. The preliminary stages of his psychic development, they pointed out, had passed, and he was quite able to enter with confidence upon the suggested undertaking.

The results have been gratifying, numerous portraits having been satisfactorily produced in the presence of witnesses, who have been astonished that a man who had never seen the deceased persons, nor even a picture of them, could produce such striking likenesses.

An example of the keen interest the spirits take in this form of mediumship is shown, not only in their willingness to “sit” for their portraits, but in the astonishment they sometimes show when they realise that it can be done.

On one occasion the spirit of a venerable North American Indian appeared for reproduction, and as his eyes were closed, Mr. Leah asked him why he did not open them.

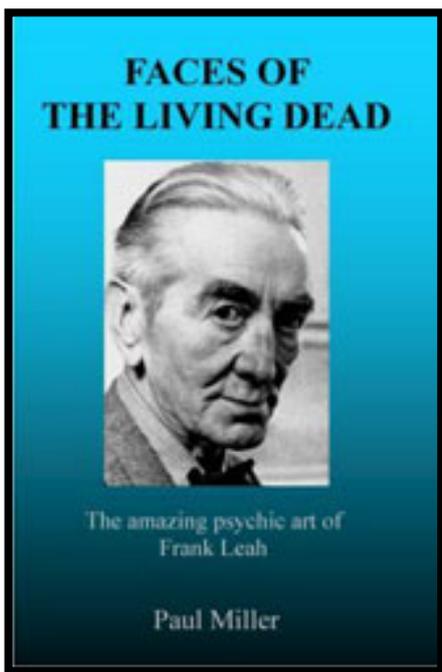

“My eyes are not closed,” came the reply. “I am very tall, and am merely looking down; can’t you see?”

Having drawn the eyebrows, the artist was astonished to see them appear to rise as if with surprise.

“Why do you raise your eyebrows?” asked Mr. Leah.

“Would not you raise yours if you were as surprised as I am?” returned the spirit in the “direct voice.”

So many people have become interested in Mr. Leah’s work that he is preparing a set of lantern slides of some of the pictures he has produced, and will shortly undertake a lecture tour with a view to presenting the full philosophical and scientific value of this new evidence of survival.

Book review:

The Spirit Artist

Alan Stuttle

The ‘Pioneer’ has covered Harold Sharp, who may be considered the father of ‘symbolic drawings’; later these would become better known as ‘auragraphs’ – see the October 2014 issue. In the January issue, ‘Pioneer’ published an article on the early development of Frank Leah, who pioneered spirit portraits of family, friends and guides. Leah paved much of the ground for psychic artist Coral Polge and was followed by others like Ivor James, who worked at the Arthur Findlay College; some of his work is displayed in the museum.

Today there are a number of excellent psychic/spirit artists and some of these are tutors at the Arthur Findlay College, with Alan Stuttle being the longest-serving artist. He has been tutoring and organising courses for around a quarter of a century.<sup>16</sup>

Alan states in his book, “More than anything, Spirit Artist is a manual that gives guidance into how art and mediumship work together and what they can do for the individual.”

The book contains 72 pages, including illustrations, and provides an insight into what Alan has learned through 25 years of practising as a medium.

Alan was a professional artist and it was not until he was fifty years of age that he became a spirit artist. The book is, of course, written from his own experience and his methods of development; as with all forms of mediumship, these vary in different mediums, as Alan points out in the book.

This is a valuable work insomuch as it guides potential spirit artists through the various stages of development in easy, understandable language. The author gives step-by-step explanations for the various techniques and skills required, leading to giving private readings and public demonstrations.

Alan notes on pages 56/57:

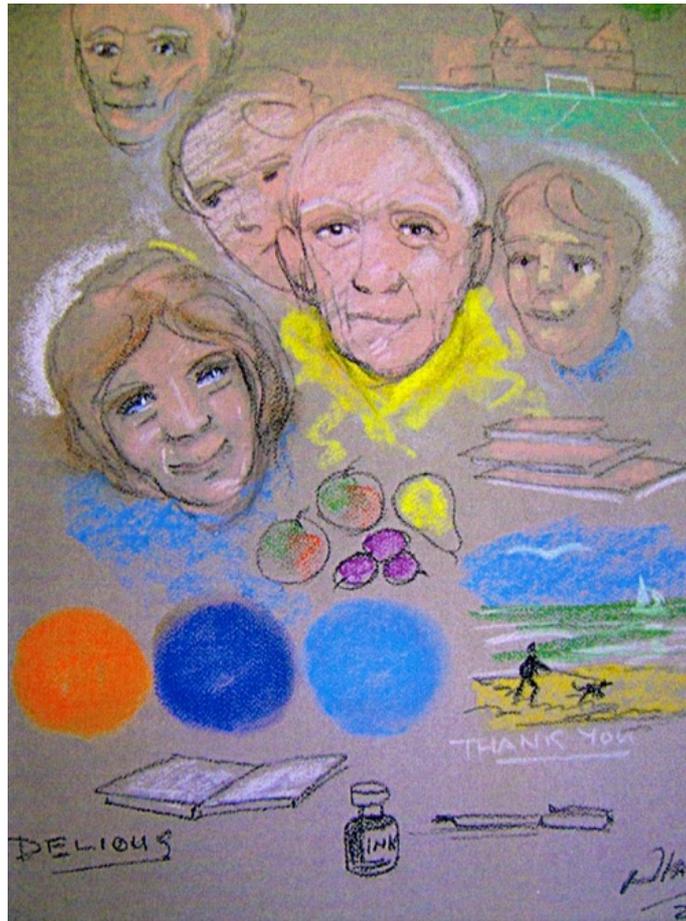

“The late Coral Polge did so much throughout the world to encourage psychic artists in their endeavours to translate their artistic talents in terms of spiritual engagement. She was a truly gifted lady and it was during one of her weeks at the Arthur Findlay College that I was given the opportunity to do my very first public demonstration. (Who would have thought it?!)”

<sup>16</sup> See AFC Approved Tutors’ profiles. Other psychic/spirit artists include Lynn Cottrell, Jan Marshall, Stella Upton and Su Wood: <http://www.arthurfindlaycollege.org/tutors.html>

The book (apart from the cover image) contains six images of the artist's work in oil and pastel, including working without brushes, just fingers. Shown is one titled "Spirit Sketch", from a private sitting with the recipient only, which took around twenty minutes; Stuttle notes:

The experience as the artistic medium is not unlike telling a story through film. The more I drew, the more the energy developed along with lots more information to help the artistic progress.

The book, published by Farthing Publishing, March 2015, is available from the Arthur Findlay College shop or from the author: alanstuttle@aol.com at £7.50, plus post and packing.

The profits will be donated to the Richard & Caroline Art Bursary to help young people develop their skills in the arts.

There will also be a video to complement the book at some future date

Trance & Direct Spirit Art

The 'Pioneer' has covered Harold Sharp, who may be considered the father of 'symbolic drawings'; later these would become better known as 'auragraphs' – see the October 2014 issue. In the January issue 'Pioneer' published an article on the early development of Frank Leah, who pioneered spirit portraits of family, friends and guides. Leah paved much of the ground for psychic artist Coral Polge and was followed by others like Ivor James, who worked at the Arthur Findlay College; some of his work is displayed in the Museum. In the May issue Alan Stuttle's new book, 'The Spirit Artist', was reviewed.

The above forms of psychic/spirit art are all practised and demonstrated today; we need to move further back into history for 'Trance & Direct Spirit Art', which made its entrance into Modern Spiritualism in the 1860s but has always remained relatively rare throughout our history. Scotland was to produce an early remarkable artist.<sup>2</sup>

David Duguid

David Duguid (1832-1907), known as “the Glasgow Painting Medium,” was by trade a working cabinet maker. His education was only elementary; he had difficulty in expressing his thoughts and had no knowledge of painting or drawing. His two brothers, Alexander and Robert, were also mediums. Although David was a capable medium for nearly all types of spiritualistic phenomena, he confined himself chiefly to trance speaking, automatic painting and drawing, and psychic photography.

At a painting séance, though his eyes were always tightly shut, he worked pretty much like an ordinary artist, but much faster. Having become entranced, he first filled his palette with the colours he intended to use, chose his brushes, adjusted the easel, sketched in his picture and then began to paint. Though his eyes were shut, he seemed to examine his work just as if he saw with them, standing back occasionally to get a better view. It was usual, after he had started his picture, to put out the light, the only effect being that the painting proceeded faster, spirit action being at all times aided by darkness. In this way fair-sized pictures were finished in from half an hour to one hour, and smaller ones in about ten minutes; later, however, the latter were done directly, in a few seconds.

<sup>2</sup> The Duguid article is taken from 'The Facts of Psychic Science', by A. Campbell Holms (1861-1954), originally published in 1925 and later republished in 1969 by University Books Inc, N.Y., pages 201-206. In the early days of the Union 'Britten Memorial' played a significant role and Campbell Holms' excellent reference book was in part researched from the Britten Memorial library. In the words of the former S.N.U. President Ernest Oaten: – “Turning from general considerations to the specialised psychic library, the Britten Memorial proper, Mr. Oaten stressed the fact that as a collection of psychic works it was without its equal in this country. “Years ago,” he said, “when Mr. Campbell Holms commenced his researches for material for the encyclopaedic work, The Facts of Psychic Science and Philosophy, I was able to put him in touch with a mine of valuable information in the volumes of the Britten Library.” (Quoted from Britten Memorial Centre for Psychic Study and Research in North, by James Norbury, published in Light, June 3, 1932, page 272.)

It should be observed that Duguid did not exhibit his mediumship for gain, he had his daily occupation and practised his mediumship in his leisure time. He had a devoted circle of Glasgow friends; and once a week, at least, for about forty years, they met together, usually at Duguid's house. All the best manifestations occurred here, the environment being well saturated with the medium's "magnetism." Later, in order that strangers might profit, two evenings were set aside in each week for their admission, and many hundreds from all classes of the community attended.

The spirit artist who first entranced Duguid, could not, or would not give his name, but promised to disclose his identity by painting a copy of one of his masterpieces. He then painted, by the hand of the medium, a picture initialled J.R., and which was recognised as a copy of "The Waterfall," by Jacob Ruisdal (1636-81), as reproduced in Cassell's Art Treasures Exhibition (p. 301). He then admitted he was Ruisdal. Some figures were omitted in the medium's painting which were shown in the original, and, on being questioned, Ruisdal explained that the painting, as he finished it, had no figures, and that these had been added by his friend, Bergheim. On referring to Ruisdal's biography, this was found to be correct. Duguid had another spirit-artist control, Jan Steen, also a well-known Dutch painter, who was a humorous spirit when controlling Duguid.

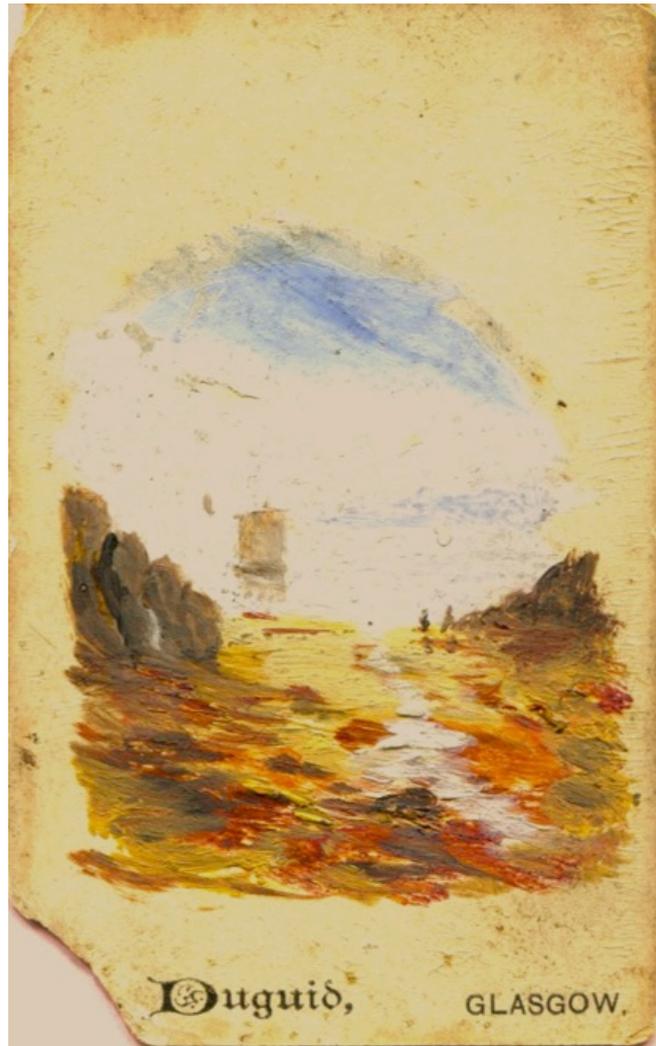

It was soon ascertained by Duguid's circle that equally good and more marvellous results could be obtained when the spirit artists worked directly on the paper, instead of by the hand of the medium. The one condition necessary for such direct work was complete darkness, the medium remaining entranced but sitting back in his chair. To ensure that his hands had no part in the production of the picture, they were sometimes held, otherwise they were tied together, and his arms to the back of the chair. The spirit controls were always anxious that such test conditions should prevail, and insisted on them when anything important was in hand. The tying was usually done very tightly with silk handkerchiefs; and sometimes when the wrists were tied in front and his elbows to the chair back, it would be found, on lighting up, that the binding had been changed, his wrists being behind his back. And the knots, on one occasion at least, were so tightly tied that the sitters could not undo them, but on the light being extinguished for only a few seconds the spirits undid them during the momentary darkness. Sometimes his jacket was taken off while his wrists and arms were tied; this has occurred with many mediums.

Although some fair-sized pictures were painted by direct spirit action, most of them were on small cards, 3½ by 2½ inches (photographer's blank cartes-de-visite). The medium used to carry some of these in his pocket so that they might become magnetised. At a séance, when entranced he would take one of them, hold it between his hands, breathe on it, tear a corner off and present it to one of the sitters for identification purposes, and then throw the card so prepared on the table; otherwise the sitters initialled the blank cards. Having put suitable colours on his palette and chosen some small clean brushes, the light would be extinguished for ten to thirty seconds and on relighting, a tiny oil painting would be found in the middle of the card. Sometimes the pictures were miniature landscapes about the size of a sixpence, and so finely executed as to stand magnification under a strong lens. On one occasion a small card was filled up with six little oil paintings, the time occupied being five or six minutes. Several small paintings of varying artistic merit were done at each séance, and were usually given to the sitters. The total number distributed in this way must have been very large.

In all such direct work the spirits seemed to operate in mid-air, for the noise of sketching came from well above the table, and on its completion the cards, papers, pencil or brushes, were heard to fall on the table, the painted side of the card uppermost and sticky with fresh paint. Precisely the same thing was observed by Mr. Everitt, when direct writing came through his wife; but Mrs. Everitt, unlike Duguid, was not entranced at these times.<sup>3</sup>

Besides direct spirit painting, Duguid obtained many direct pencil drawings, and writings in different languages. The forty odd illustrations in Hafid,<sup>4</sup> Prince of Persia were facsimiles of spirit drawings all made on sheets of paper about nine inches by five. He sometimes obtained direct spirit drawings on a folded sheet of paper placed within a sealed envelope, in a similar manner to the direct writings of the Misses Bangs, of Chicago, but with Duguid, the whole room was darkened, whereas with the Misses Bangs, the dark space between two slates served the same purpose. The following quotation is from an account of a sitting with Duguid recorded in The Spiritualist, for June, 1875, by Mr. J. Freeman, one of the sitters:—

“ . . . Another piece of ordinary printing paper, supplied by Mr. Nisbet, who was with us at the séance, was folded and placed in an envelope, fastened down and initialled by each of those present, except the medium, who was still too tightly bound to his chair, hands, feet, and arms, to permit it. The sealed envelope was then placed upon the table, and all were requested to put their fingers upon the envelope; the gas was then put out, and after a lapse of, say, three minutes, a light was struck and we were instructed to open the envelope, which, after satisfactory examination, we did, and found upon the paper enclosed a very interesting pencil drawing of a half-length female figure in profile, surrounded by winged heads, with an eye at the top in the centre, and a German sentence at the bottom. The paper was identified as being the same which was seen in the first instance without the drawing upon it.

“Now I do not pretend to know how this was done, but no ordinary difficulties had to be overcome. (1) A securely bound medium, who could not so much as touch the paper. (2) A folded paper in a secured envelope. (3) The pressure of five pairs of hands upon the envelope containing the paper while resting upon the table.

“Next, an additional test was given us. A plain card was provided off which we tore a corner and retained as a means of future identification. Paints and pencils were then placed before the medium, who remained bound as before described, the room darkened, and when we were requested almost immediately to re-light up, we found upon the table where it had previously been placed, the same card, with a neatly executed landscape in oil upon it, with the colours still wet and the pencil (one only), full of the last colour which had been used in the production of the picture.”

David Duguid is famous as the medium through whom, when entranced, the spirit Hafid purported to give his experiences in earth life in the first century of the Christian era. The full title of the book, in its first edition, was Hafid, Prince of Persia; his Experiences in Earth life and Spirit life; being Spirit Communications received through Mr. David Duguid, the Glasgow Trance-Painting Medium, with an Appendix, containing Communications from the Spirit Artists Ruisdal and Stem, illustrated by facsimiles of forty-five Drawings and Writings, the Direct Work of the Spirits. The book is still obtainable in a cheap edition, in which most of the illustrations are omitted.

Duguid's utterances were taken down by Mr. Hay Nisbet; they extended over forty-six sittings held during 1870 and 1871. Difficulties were encountered because the writing, being in long hand, was slow, and the spirit often spoke quickly and excitedly. Proper names and dates were uttered with such difficulty that they had to be written by the medium automatically, or directly by the spirits. To ensure correctness in the finished MS. it was read aloud at intervals, and listened to and amended by Hafid in control of the medium. A large number of sésances were occupied by this revisal work alone.

The book was published in 1876. It comprises 580 pages and has high literary merit. The first edition had forty-five illustrations, many of them full-page, and all facsimiles of drawings produced directly in the dark in the manner just described. The first edition was no sooner published than it was withdrawn at the instance of the publishers of Cassell's Family Bible, because they found that four of the illustrations were very evident copies, altered more or less, of pictures in their book. The offending pictures were expunged, and a second edition was published in the same year.

No public explanation was given of how these apparent plagiarisms came to be in the book, but to psychic students who have studied the phenomenon of direct spirit portraiture and psychic photography, there is nothing surprising in the incident. Duguid admitted he had looked through Cassell's Family Bible on one occasion, and an impression of the illustrations had no doubt been recorded in his subconscious memory, which, being at all times accessible to his controlling spirits, was doubtless utilised in their work, while perhaps unconscious or careless of its source.

It often happened that Duguid's direct paintings represented scenes on the Clyde well known to the medium. But it also occurred that some direct paintings represented scenes in America familiar to American sitters, which were probably produced from impressions recorded in their subconscious memories. Mr. Hay Nisbet records<sup>5</sup> that Duguid's spirit artists stated on several occasions that the scenes painted by them were sometimes taken from impressions recorded in the memories of the sitters or medium.

Nevertheless, it seems a marvellous thing that the Hafid pictures so closely resembled those of which they were admittedly copies.<sup>6</sup> One of the pictures represents the interior of a temple, with decorated ceiling and several large pillars highly ornamented. But while in the Family Bible picture the temple is shown as a disused ruin, in the Hafid picture it is shown in perfect preservation. Nevertheless, the spirit drawing, while finer and more detailed than that in the Family Bible, is in general aspect and many minor details identical with it.

It is difficult to conceive that the medium, when glancing through the Bible, had recorded in his memory all the fine ornamental details in such a way as to be able to reproduce them accurately. Still, it must be remembered that the subconscious mind is marvellously more impressionable than the conscious mind. (This is demonstrated by experiments in hypnotism; a hypnotised subject, on merely glancing at the page of a book, has told how many times a particular letter occurred). Duguid's conscious vision noticed few of these details, but they were in the picture momentarily formed in the retina of the eye, and this, no doubt, was impressed indelibly on the subconscious mind and memory.

It is interesting to note that reproductions of existing pictures have occurred with other drawing mediums, working under similar conditions, notably with the American medium, Mrs. French, and with Mrs. Marshall, a medium well known in London between 1860 and 1870. On one occasion Captain G. obtained through Mrs. Marshall a pencil portrait of the poet Goethe—an oval medallion with the name inscribed in capital letters below—and he found that it was a close copy of an engraving in a book, the Life of Goethe, the oval shape and the inscription being faithfully reproduced. It was well known that copies of existing pictures were occasionally reproduced through Mrs. Marshall, and Captain G.'s faith in the spiritual origin of his portrait of Goethe was unshaken.<sup>7</sup>

Like nearly all physical mediums, Duguid was accused of fraud. He was then 73 years of age, had an unblemished reputation, and during forty years of mediumship had, without fee, given thousands of séances. Unfortunately it would appear from an impartial study of the evidence that he was guilty of deliberate fraud at a séance on April 1, 1905, in Manchester, at the house of Mr. Stead. He was accused of secreting on his person two freshly-painted cards, and of substituting them for two blank ones lying on the table, on which the spirit paintings were supposed to come. It was alleged that from each of the painted cards he had torn a corner, and had stuck these two corners, by means of adhesive substance, to corners previously torn off the two blank cards. When, at the beginning of the séance, he produced these two doctored blank cards, he did not exhibit them, but, while holding them in view, quickly whipped off the stuck-on corners, and handed them to the sitters. In the darkness he then substituted the painted cards (which the corners held by the sitters fitted) for the blank cards, and slipped the latter down the leg of his pants, where they were felt and found when he was forcibly searched after the séance. The oil paintings were fresh and sticky, but as they were concave on the painted side he was able to carry them face to face without smudging them. When asked to account for the hidden mutilated cards, he prevaricated, and was unable to give a satisfactory explanation, except that he was entranced and that the cards were old ones.

Though fatal to Duguid's continued reputation as a man of honour, his fraudulent conduct at this séance does not discredit the phenomena produced through him in the past. It may be observed that on many occasions at his painting séances the sitters themselves tore the corners off the cards, or else initialled them. One has only to read the exceedingly voluminous records of his phenomena, produced continuously during 40 years, before astute, sceptical sitters, to feel satisfied that systematic fraud was out of the question. In his old age his psychic power, or his original spirit controls seem to have deserted him; also his sense of moral rectitude, which mediumship in so many cases would seem to inhibit.<sup>8</sup> A good account of Duguid's mediumship will be found in Nisbet's introduction and appendix to the book, Hafid, Prince of Persia; and in hundreds of articles in contemporaneous literature, from 1866 onwards.<sup>9</sup>

MARCEL PONCIN

It appears the image of Estelle Roberts giving clairvoyance as seen by the artist Marcel Poncin was his first inspirational painting reported in ‘Psychic News’, December 4th 1937. The original painting hangs today in the ‘Mediums Room’ at the Arthur Findlay College. Shortly after, Poncin would paint the well-known image of Silver Birch, followed by others such as healer William (Billy) Parish; see “Pioneer”, October 2014.

SOME DISCERN SPIRITS . . .

Artist Paints Medium Giving Clairvoyance

“SOME discern spirits,” said St. Paul in his First Epistle to the Corinthians. The Churches are still puzzled by his words. He meant, of course, clairvoyance—seeing spirits.

In this inspirational painting, a French artist, Marcel Poncin, shows Estelle Roberts, Spiritualism’s best-known public clairvoyant, surrounded by faces of the “dead.”

When he had the urge to paint this picture, the artist had no idea of featuring Estelle Roberts. He wanted it to be a symbolical picture which he intended to call “The Medium.”

The face of Mrs. Roberts persistently intruded itself. So he decided to paint it.

Then came the head of the Indian spirit, not supposed to represent her guide; Red Cloud, but meant to depict the guide who is always in the background of a medium.

Those who have watched Estelle Roberts giving public demonstrations know how she declares that she often hears the spirit voices and, even when she is describing one of the “dead,” others try to attract her attention.

THE WHISPERED MESSAGE

In this painting you see one spirit whispering a message in her ear, while others bring themselves within the range of her vision in the hope of being described.

Marcel Poncin has been an artist for over twenty-five years. He has exhibited in the Salon des Artistes Francais, which is the “Royal Academy” of France.

Painting psychic pictures is a new departure for him and the urge began about four months ago. These inspirational paintings are all executed in the same tones, in a style that is different from his usual oil colours. He feels that he is the instrument of some higher power. When the artist is finished, he is exhausted.

Two years ago, Thomas Wyatt predicted that Poncin would execute psychic paintings, but as he had felt no urge to do so he dismissed the idea.

More recently Rosie, Bertha Hirst's spirit control, mentioned the psychic paintings again and prophesied that one would be published in a Spiritualist newspaper.

Poncin died in 1953. It can be noted in his obituary, published in the Two Worlds, June 13th, 1953, that he was urged by the spirit of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle to acquaint Lady Doyle of his spirit return:

Marcel Poncin, psychic artist, passes on

MARCEL PONCIN, who was rightly esteemed for his outstanding psychic paintings of spirit guides, including Silver Birch, passed on early last Monday morning after an operation.

For a quarter of a century he worked as an artist, achieving distinction in France. Blasco Ibanez, the celebrated Spanish author, commissioned him to paint his portrait and asked him to do all the illustrations for his famous book "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Like most Frenchmen, Marcel was brought up a Roman Catholic, but even in his youth he was attracted to Spiritualism. Both his mother and grandmother were psychic. He was present at a seance at his home when he was four.

His interest in the subject was aroused after his marriage to Sumurun, the best-known mannequin in Paris. She was a great friend of Raoul Montandon, the most distinguished Spiritualist in Switzerland.

At seances held at Geneva, using a home-made ouija board, there was spelt out "ACD." In reply to a question, it was stated that the communicator was Arthur Conan Doyle. A message stated that Poncin would do some work connected with Spiritualism, but the nature of the work was not indicated.

Conan Doyle urged the artist to acquaint Lady Doyle of his spirit return. This he did and received an invitation to meet her and her son when he visited England.

In this country several mediums told him that he would be doing psychic work. Not long afterwards there came a succession of psychic paintings, each in a style different from his own normal work. These were all painted in delicate blue and silver tones and were executed speedily.

One unique feature of all these psychic paintings is the vivid, liquid and limpid eyes, which seem to hold you with their gaze.

In more recent years the films and the stage claimed his attention. He played character parts on London's West End stage and in scores of films.

Lady Jean Doyle was herself a medium; details are given in her obituary. Jean Elizabeth Leckie was born on March 14th 1874 and was the second wife of Arthur Conan Doyle, who married her on September 18th 1907. Lady Doyle died on June 27th 1940, almost ten years to the day her husband had died, on July 6th 1930. Below is the 'Two Worlds' obituary published on the front page, July 6th 1940:

Lady Doyle Was The Family Medium

Lady Doyle who passed on last week was for many years the medium of the family's home Circle. Through her psychic powers there came spirit messages which cheered Sir Arthur in his great propagandist campaign for Spiritualism.

There was counsel from the spirit world. There were teachings which inspired Doyle to champion what he called both "The New Revelation" and "The Vital Message," and there were intimate proofs for members of family.

Referring to her inspired writing, Arthur has placed on record a tribute to his wife's mediumship. "In her intense honesty and deep modesty," he said, "she somewhat retarded it at first by holding back her impulses in the fear lest they should come from her own subconscious self.

"Gradually, however, the unexpected nature of the messages and the allusions to be found in them showed both her and me that there were forces at work which were outside herself. Sentiments were expressed quite foreign to our own."

The first written communications, which started nine years before Sir Arthur's passing, came from "dead" relations and friends. Then there were visits from strangers.

A year later, Pheneas, Doyle's spirit guide, came through for the first time, and took chief control. The next development was that the writing mediumship changed to what Doyle described as "semi-trance inspiration talking."

Though Lady Doyle never completely lost consciousness, her hold upon her own organism was slight. The messages increased in power as fuller control was gained.

FRANK LEAH

Psychic artist

Frank Leah was featured in “Pioneer”, Vol. 2, No. 1, January 2014, “Artist who draws ‘Spirit’ pictures”. Frank Leah paved the ground for later psychic artists like Coral Polge. In 1943 Paul Miller published “Faces of the Living Dead”; at the time of publication Leah had been drawing faces of the living dead for over fifteen years. The book was republished in paperback in 2010 by Saturday Night Press Publications.<sup>7</sup>

Below is a quote from the first edition:

“ “IF only I could see his face.” That is the heart-cry of the mourner from the moment the body is laid away until time wears down the sharp edge of grief—or until Spiritualism answers the cry and there appears in reality the voice, the touch, the message, or the face of the living dead. It has happened so often that the time has come to record, in lasting form, some of the many cases of evidence which prove, beyond question, that not only do the “dead” live beyond the grave, but that they have the power, under suitable conditions and with the right kind of medium, of posing for their portraits.

“Unfortunately for the armies of mourners throughout the world, there is only one medium trained to draw or paint the “dead”. This is his story—Frank Leah, a journalist, artist, and medium. He was born with the psychic gift he now employs for the comfort of mourners. Long before he understood its meaning and purpose he was afraid of it. He sees with the eye of the spirit in a special way, for we all have some degree of perception. In most it is buried beneath the cares of the day and of this world; in others its beholding is ignored or dismissed as day-dreams. To others again, as in Leah’s case, it flowers as an artistic gift which is employed for a great and beneficent work—the stilling of fear, the soothing of the brooding mind, the comforting of the aching heart, and the kindling of the joy of recollection of the face of the well-known and well-beloved.

“Now a psychic or spiritual gift has to be trained. It is not something handed to the medium and left untended. The greater the technical skill in the medium, the greater the service that is done, for those who from the Other Side have charge of this work can then impress their points of evidence with greater skill and ease. Behind every evidential drawing, behind every detail impressed on paper, there is a story. Those who, from the spirit world, guide this medium-artist are so well versed in their work that they neglect nothing that will bring conviction—but when they have reached that point they go no further. That is a fact. Leah has given hundreds of instances of it. Did they so desire, I have no doubt—because of my long acquaintance with the power of those who guide mediums—the spirit operators could paint pictures that would rival the best in our art galleries. Often they are the great painters and singers, poets and musicians, teachers and reformers, doing again their familiar work from another place. That is all, and they temper their power to their purpose. They show in another form, a form all can understand, that there is no death, that the body perishes and the soul lives on, retaining memories, affections and the power to show facial peculiarities, aye, and even blemishes, for evidential purposes. The warm human personalities are alive always; and as of old they like to comfort those they love and have left behind. They like to know they have succeeded in catching the artist's eye, and that he has put their likenesses on record.

"In the early days of Leah's work he received sitters, all anonymously, through Spiritualist societies, and for their satisfaction he used a red torch to light his drawing board and paper while he worked, always with the sitter as close to him as possible.

"Leah has had many kinds of sitters. Many know nothing of Survival until they come to him. It would make no difference to him if he used a red torch or an electric light, for many of the drawings are made in his mind—if not, in fact, on paper—before the sitters arrive. Sometimes he describes the "dead" on the telephone before the prospective sitter has had time to give a name and ask for an appointment. How could Leah know who was going to telephone him—unless the "dead" relative told him? Some spirits are drawn in daylight; others have been done on top of a London bus."

"In the first instance all the sketches are outlined rapidly, though not all are completed rapidly. Some are finished within a few minutes; some have been done in a few seconds. Yet other spirits are obstinate or retiring, and the work is retarded or complicated. Often a life-size head will appear so rapidly that it appears not to be drawn but to be projecting itself on the paper."

Mrs. Ethel Gibbon, of Sussex Gardens, West London, made her first appointment with Leah anonymously, and when she saw him it was for the first time in her life. If you know Leah's quick, direct way of speaking you can imagine him saying this as he did to Mrs. Gibbon almost as soon as she entered the room: "There are two husbands here, but the second husband comes more strongly." Then the spirit gave the medium his name as Hugh, adding that he was a doctor. His full name was Alfred Hugh Gibbon. He explained that he had come to "collect" his wife's mother who was being prepared for her passing. He told Leah that his mother-in-law had lived on the Other Side for many months, though still on earth, and that she was 102. Now the artist, accustomed to making portraits, could not believe that, and he said so because the daughter who was in the room with him did not look as though her mother was anything like 100.

Then the doctor posed for his portrait, showing himself wearing a monocle in his left eye. This was confirmed on comparison with a normal photograph. He also showed himself with his cigarette holder as a further proof of his identity. The whole drawing took two minutes, but it was not the end of the evidence for Mrs. Gibbon, for the artist prophesied that her mother would pass within a month. True, a prophecy is not evidence until it comes to pass, but this one did.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> The story continues giving further evidence of survival but owing to space it is not possible to continue.

It can be noted that Leah's drawings were given personally to the sitters; it would not be until sixty years ago, in March 1957, that Frank Leah made "the first-ever attempt at public post-mortem portraiture". Leah paved the ground for psychic/spirit artists but also for the first public partnered demonstrations, with mediums tuning into the same spirit contact. Later came the public partnerships of Coral Polge and Gordon Higginson, Stephen O'Brien, etc.

Below is the first report of an attempt at public post-mortem portraiture by Frank Leah, partnered by the clairvoyant Helen Hughes, who was featured in "Pioneer", Vol. 2, No. 3, May 2015:

Frank Leah sketches a psychic portrait that was speedily identified.

“Dead” man’s remarkable public proofs:

drawn by psychic artist – named by clairvoyant – identified

MORE than 1,000 people witnessed the first-ever attempt at public post-mortem portraiture by famous psychic artist Frank Leah at the Kingsway Hall meeting organised by Two Worlds last week.<sup>9</sup>

Dwarfed by twin easels against the majestic backcloth of the giant organ, the artist executed four rapid charcoal drawings, three of men and one of a woman.

Perhaps the most dramatic moment of the evening occurred after Leah had unveiled two previously drawn portraits and asked whether anyone could identify them. With an outstretched finger indicating one of the pictures, taffeta-gowned and radiant clairvoyant Helen Hughes added a staccato postscript to the brilliant demonstration with which she had set the tone of the meeting.

“My father”

“That man’s name is Vallance Elam!” she said. Immediately, a woman sitting in the balcony called out, “Vallance Elam was my father!”

Called down to the platform, she produced a passport photograph of a man, signed “Vallance Elam,” which showed a clear likeness to the portrait.

Announcing that he would-sketch a man who had died in his 85th year and whose features he had begun to “see” during a telephone conversation, the blue-smocked artist with the charcoal drew the face of an elderly man. As he worked, he made comments into a hand-microphone.

He had a long nose . . . no teeth and the head is well down. But above all, he had exceptionally large ears. . . .” Sure enough, exceptionally large ears took shape.

<sup>9</sup> Reported by Philip Paul, published in the “Two Worlds”, March 30th 1957.

“That is absolutely right, it is my father,” called Miss Vera Cripps, of Five Ways, Norfolk Road, Maidenhead, from the audience.

Obvious likeness

But Leah was not satisfied. “Stay a moment,” he advised, “there is a correction here.” A few deft strokes preceded another comparison of portrait and photograph. Again, an obvious similarity had been secured.

Grey-haired, 73-year-old little Mrs. Elizabeth White, of 120 Columbia Square, Bethnal Green, told the meeting that she could not produce a photograph of her father, who had refused to have one taken. But she was positive in her recognition of a keen-eyed middle-aged man whose face took shape under Leah’s expert hand as her parent, who had, she said, died when she was only 18. As he worked, the artist provided a feature-by-feature description.

The female portrait depicted an elderly woman who wore a patch over what Leah said had been a blind eye. “She was quite small,” he said, “only so big”—indicating a height level with his shoulder.

“She was over 60 . . . over 70 . . . over 80 . . . over 90 . . . no, wait a minute, about halfway. She was over 85 . . . the cheeks had gone in . . . there was very little eyesight . . . a little button nose . . . very lined forehead . . . wispy hair . . .”

After each comment, there was a “Yes” from Mrs. Lilian Flower, of 375 Rochester Way, Eltham, who spoke into a microphone placed near her balcony seat. But when Leah remarked, “She was very excitable,” Mrs. Flower responded, “Sure, she was Irish!”

“There was a little touch of vanity about her,” said the artist. “No,” said Mrs. Flower, “we Irish are not vain, we just like our-selves!”

When Leah asked if she had a photograph of her mother, she replied, “No, she tore it up because she couldn’t abide it.”

The most outstanding of Helen Hughes’ 14 messages was delivered to a couple who responded to her “Does anyone in the audience know a Captain Wotton?”

Receiving the acceptance, she went on, “Had he anything to do with a garage?”—“Indirectly.”

“Do you work in a garage?”—“Yes.” “He says you appear to be shocked by him coming to-night.”

“Peter is here, with Jack.”—“I understand.”

“He is with Captain Wotton and a John who died with thrombosis.”—“Yes.”

“You are not a Spiritualist . . . you are not sure.” — “Right.”

“Jack was killed.”—“Yes.”

“Have you been painting the garage? Yes.”

“He likes it but it is not quite what he would have done.” (Laughter).

“You dismantled a car today.”—“No, not quite.”

Airplane victim

“He says, ‘Just tell him I am among everything and they don’ know just what takes place.’ You don’t know how much you are helped by Jack. He will never leave you. Don’t be embarrassed if I ask you this, but didn’t you take Jack’s place? Yes.”

“He was killed in a plane, but he was not in uniform. It was a private plane.”—“Yes.”

Pointing into the audience at the start of another message, Helen asked: “Has someone just here got two photographs in their pocket? No, it is for you; someone wants his mother.”

A moment’s pause and a whispered aside to an unseen communicator. Then: Oh, yes, she has got her best coat on! Did you get your best coat to come here?”—“Yes.” (Laughter).

Told that her time had ended, Helen was expressing her thanks to her listeners when . . . another message!

“Is there anyone over there who knows a boy named Harry Mannings?” “Yes,” from the back of the hall. He says he has Freddie with him and the whole bunch that went down with him. And there is someone named Edith Mannings. She suffered with her chest, but they thought she took her brandy because she liked it!” (Laughter).

Just two days after the new year, you were going through the old photographs.”—“Yes, quite true.”

“There is a lady here who says she is Beatrice and you are not to have tears in your eyes any more.”—“I know, thank you.”

In his introductory remarks, Maurice Barbanell said that life after death was a fact in accordance with natural laws “just like those which control the arrival and departure of the four seasons.

“We say that Survival is a biological fact in which you have no alternative. Many religions teach life after death, but none offers evidence as Spiritualism does. Science is not much help, for, alas, today all that science seems to be able to offer is either complete annihilation by the detonation of H-bombs or contamination of countless unborn generations.

Today, March 21, is the first day of Spring, an annual reminder that the universe is ruled by natural laws. Spring heralds the resurrection after the long winter of death.”

HAROLD SHARP

Symbolic Drawings – Auragraphs

This year's "Open Week", May 5th to 8th, at the Arthur Findlay College saw the launch of Harold Sharp's Symbolic Drawings – Auragraphs. These are published in two Britten Museum & Library booklets containing one hundred images taken from two of Sharp's bound albums, which are held in the Museum. Three of the pages are shown randomly in the article below.

Information on Sharp's remarkable drawings can be found in Pioneer, Vol. 1, No. 5, October 2014. For over a quarter of a century Sharp worked at the Marylebone Spiritualist Association, founded in 1872, today known as the Spiritualist Association of Great Britain (SAGB). He was also programmed in the early days of the Arthur Findlay College.

In the 1970s Harold moved into a health home for elderly people in Golcar, Huddersfield, West Yorkshire. He died soon after his 90th birthday, on February 22nd 1980.

Below is taken from the "Two Worlds", February 20th 1948:

He Portrays the Soul in Colour

THE MEDIUMSHIP OF HAROLD SHARP

By CHARLES Y. STROMBERG F.Ph.S.(Eng.)

Harold Sharp is a kindly, simple man, with more than twenty years' experience of the outworkings of the spirit world. He is not just another auragraph medium—for his graphs are unique, and the profundity of their interpretation is rarely met with elsewhere.

The human aura, distinct from the etheric and spiritual bodies, is a field of magnetism surrounding the physical body, registering vibrations of character, mentality, health and environment. Sharp's first indication of his gift was during the air raids early in the war. Whilst on the telephone, or playing the gramophone, he "doodled" an unusual combination of rhythmical lines. He then experimented with pieces of blank paper of varying sizes, and found that whatever the size sheet, the design was completed with the sounding of the "all clear."

Aura: 4

The early graphs were mostly in pen and ink, whilst later colour pictographs were designed. The medium is unable to draw or paint, and the striking resemblance of his work to the mystical designs of William Blake reminds one of the latter's saying that "he could only draw a line when an angel was standing by."

Sharp's Chinese Medium

The medium's Chinese Guide, Chan Shih, was a metal engraver on earth, which accounts for his particular aptitude. He sees the sitter as a radiant human being, raying a magnetic flow from all the body cells. We are informed that there are seven different wavelengths to which man responds, and that every word, thought and deed uses some of the magnetism.

To allow the guide to work, the medium concentrates his conscious mind on the sitter, who is often anonymous, losing control over his hand which designs quite independently of his will. First the hand picks up colour, which accords with the magnetic vibration of the sitter. The aura is not seen in colour but Chan transposes magnetism into the different medium. The same underlying principle may apply to colour and music, these being the expression in different keys of an inward pulsating rhythm. The colouring completed, Chan draws in ink the lines and whorls representative of the emotional aspect of the aura, then he takes the medium in trance and reads his interpretation of the graph from the base upwards, line by line.

How the Graph is Built

Lines may be rhythmic, fluid or hard, depending on emotional or intellectual conditions. Colour represents the rate of vibration. The graph is usually built up from a base in three divisions; material conditions, development of the personality, and the state of the mental and spiritual planes. A balanced person would have low red vibrations at the base gradually increasing in rate through the centre to the upper zone, where spiritual yellow should be apparent. The picture is often symbolical as in one example, when from a heart grew a tree which was linked to a church, this indicating the love from which proceeds true growth in life and finds expression in worship and service. Character trends may similarly be depicted.

X-ray of the Soul

Chan's psychological understanding enables him to advise and treat many in need. The diagnosis of health would in itself form a valuable aid to healing and medicine. Natural ability corresponds to magnetic radiation, and its pictorial discernment helps the sitter to find out whether he is in his right vocation. One pertinent example shows an actor, whose graph inclination a marked inclination to architecture and inherent inability to act. This sitter, though a failure as an actor, would have been brilliant as a playwright, they could follow their natural life patterns, thus alleviating much pain and avoiding the wasteful trial and error methods through which they now pass. The auragraph provides an X-ray of the human being on the three planes of body, mind and spirit.

Authenticity is confirmed by the remarkable speed with which the work is executed. The speed with which colour is selected and the design drawn is beyond the capacity of any artist. This type of auragraph can enrich mankind, and opens a wide field of research. Similarly as character is now portrayed, so the hidden fastness of the soul may in time be revealed.

Book Tests

Harold Sharp is also a noted demonstrator and speaker. Possessing a flair for clear expression and infectious enthusiasm, he now wishes to devote his public life to propaganda. Privately, he is especially interested in book tests, which perhaps beyond all else can prove conclusively the existence of the discarnate worlds. Evidence precluding all telepathic theories has been given based on facts quite unknown both to medium and sitter, which were most unlikely in the experience of either, and yet proved incontestably true.

Spiritualism Clarifies

Spiritualism, Mr. Sharp believes, stimulates and clarifies the individual philosophic bent. Its true value will only manifest when the “doorstep” people pass into a wider philosophical understanding. Phenomena are indeed necessary, but only to point the road whence philosophy, both abstract and applied, may commence.

As medium and man, Harold Sharp is endowed with a rare combination of spiritual gifts. His influence may lead to considerable advances in human health and well-being.

Aura: 2

Within the above “Two Worlds” article this Harold Sharp image was included but the readers then did not benefit from the stunning colours of Sharp’s work; a sitter explained the auragraph on page 62:

In the black and white reproduction of one of Harold Sharp’s auragraphs it is impossible to give any idea of the exquisite colouring and dainty blendings of shades as shown in the original. The work is done by the controlling hand of a young Chinaman who, when upon earth was a skilled metal engraver. And as everyone knows, the oriental engraver fills his work with a very significant symbolism.

In the auragraph from which the illustration on the front page is taken the prevailing colours are pale blue, gold, green and mauve, indicating a strong spiritual personality with a progressive outlook and courage to deal ruthlessly with wrongs and injustices. In contrast to the pale shades of the background the rocks and bridge in the foreground are a bright scarlet in colour, indicating a practical approach to all material problems.

Details of Sitter’s Character

Bridges of one kind or another appear repeatedly in various parts of the graph showing that the “sitter is a bridge-builder.” Ever seeking to bridge folks’ difficulties for them. It is true that sometimes the bridges are upside down and come to naught—all the same the intention is good.

Her guide is a Chinaman (note the Chinese pagoda) but the padlock she has fastened to the gate indicates that her self consciousness prevents the guide helping her to the degree he otherwise might.

The tall lone pine, upper left zone, indicates that much of her life is spent alone. Yet she does not chafe or grumble. Indeed she prefers to be alone, and because of her active mind she never feels lonely.

Mental Outlook

The mind is active and the imagination strong. Sometimes she feeds upon happy memories; sometimes she builds great castles in the air. Her truly fitting symbol is the sunflower, for, ignoring doubt she ever looks upon the bright side of existence; facing life with faith, hope and confidence.

Small butterflies flit through the picture showing that she is rather inclined to flit from subject to subject as a butterfly flits from flower to flower, without pausing to drain the rich honey nectar.

This sitter is fond of listening to music but has little creative ability, and a large inferiority complex, so it is to be expected that her enjoyment is rather in listening than in performing.

Religious Trends

She is a lover of the countryside and of the sea and has travelled abroad. Three seas are clearly indicated. She is impatient and would rather do a job herself than watch anyone fumbling. There is a little yellow zone; but it is chiefly in the very centre of the picture. This shows that the sitter needs no shrine in which to worship. Brick and mortar religion is unnecessary to her though she might very readily feel the Divine presence in the wild places of nature or even in a garden.

Creeds would mean little in her life. Ethics much! At the age of 22 there was a formidable barrier across the pathway, partly caused by her own folly. The way seemed hopelessly blocked until a way out “over the ocean wave” was discovered. There has been but little sickness except headaches which have from time to time proved troublesome.

These are some of the things indicated and explained by Mr. Sharp’s guide to the sitter, who acknowledged the correctness of the reading.

PERFECT PROOF OF AFTER-LIFE

This Psychic Drawing Challenges Sceptics

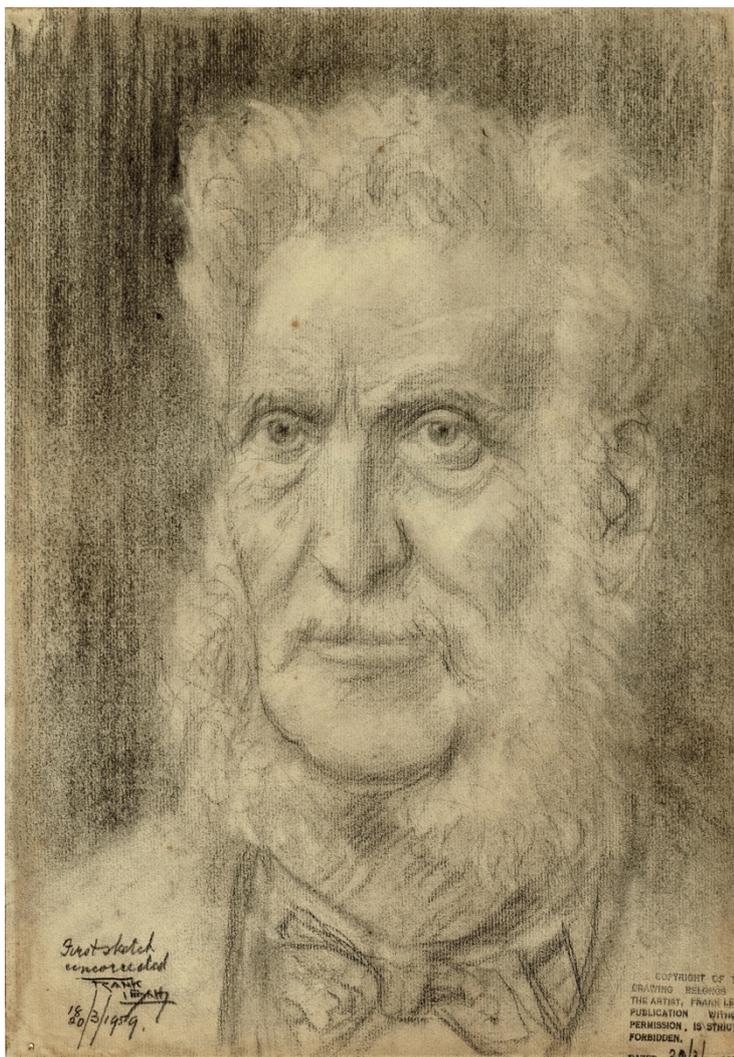

Perfect proof of Survival has been furnished by a 'dead' man whose psychic portrait is unlike any picture of him in existence.

Every known photograph possessed by his daughter shows him younger than the drawing made by that remarkable clairvoyant artist, Frank Leah.

This is a case which sceptics cannot explain away. As there is no photograph like the psychic drawing in existence they cannot argue that the seance portrait is a copy.

This psychic feat is not only incontestable evidence of the afterlife but a wonderful example of planning by a spirit intelligence.

The delighted recipient of this permanent memento of Survival is Miss C. Ward, of Burwash Common, Sussex. She is an old Spiritualist, who wrote Leah for an appointment without disclosing the individual she hoped would communicate.

He made his customary reply, 'Please telephone me.' Leah does this because a long experience has taught him that his successes in psychic art are achieved if, in the course of telephone conversation, spirit communicators reveal their presence.

Thus he is able to describe them, give some evidential messages from them and make preliminary sketches of their appearance.

Miss Ward telephoned she was told by Leah that her father and mother wished to manifest that several others were present but her father was the most dominant. An appointment was made for Miss Ward to visit Leah at his London studio.

No sooner had she arrived than the artist gave a detailed description of her father, who was obviously present. she confirmed the mediums description of the communicator.

Yes. she said, he was 6ft. tall or more, broad in proportion, had a long face and high forehead, a long pointed nose with its tip lower than the nostrils.

She confirmed that his keen grey-blue eyes had a far-away look, and his wavy hair was plentiful and curled over the ears. She recalled, of course, his firm mouth with moustache turned down at sides, his side-whiskers coming down under his bare chin, and prominent ears.

When, however, Leah said, 'He was very young,' she answered, 'No, he was 85 when he passed.'

Impatiently the medium retorted: 'I did not mean his years. He was a man young in spirit, full of life and energy.'

This was eagerly accepted, just as she confirmed Leah's next statement that her father was 'a seaman, a first-class navigator and a typical nautical adventurer.'

Then the medium assumed some of the communicator's earthly conditions by saying: 'I feel so cold. I cannot breath properly. I have bronchitis.'

Miss Ward's father suffered from that complaint. He also felt the cold excessively, having lived for years in India and other countries with a hot climate.

While the medium had been talking, he had been busy at work with his drawing. 'Come and look at this,' he told the sitter, and beckoned her to his easel. There she saw that the outline of her father's face was already drawn.

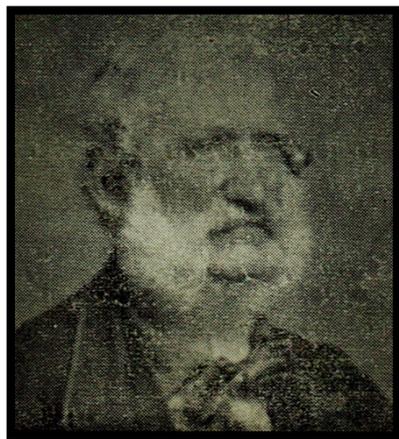

With a few rapid strokes the features took shape until, she says, the living image looked at me.' It was accurate even to the turned-down collar and carelessly knotted bow.

'Preposterous'

Leah then said: 'This is preposterous. Your father passed on 74 years ago, in 1885, when you were a child. This is the first time he has shown himself for an intimate and physical description of the kind I am now giving you. Yet you tell me he communicates orally and fairly constantly.'

Miss Ward said that with nearly every medium she had visited her father communicated.

Two days later she was asked to call and see the completed portrait. 'It show a man somewhat older than in any photograph I possess,' she says.

It was only then when the psychic drawing was finished in every detail that she produced a photograph for comparison, the one printed on page 1. Seeing this photograph for the first time, Leah commented, 'It speaks for itself.' It certainly does.

'Sure Proof'

Miss Ward recalls one other strikingly evidential reference made by Leah when she telephoned him. He then stated that something important happened 24 years ago. She knew immediately what he meant.

In 1935 her mother died very suddenly. Within a few weeks the close friend with whom she lived passed on equally suddenly, a happening which caused her to adopt a completely new style of life.

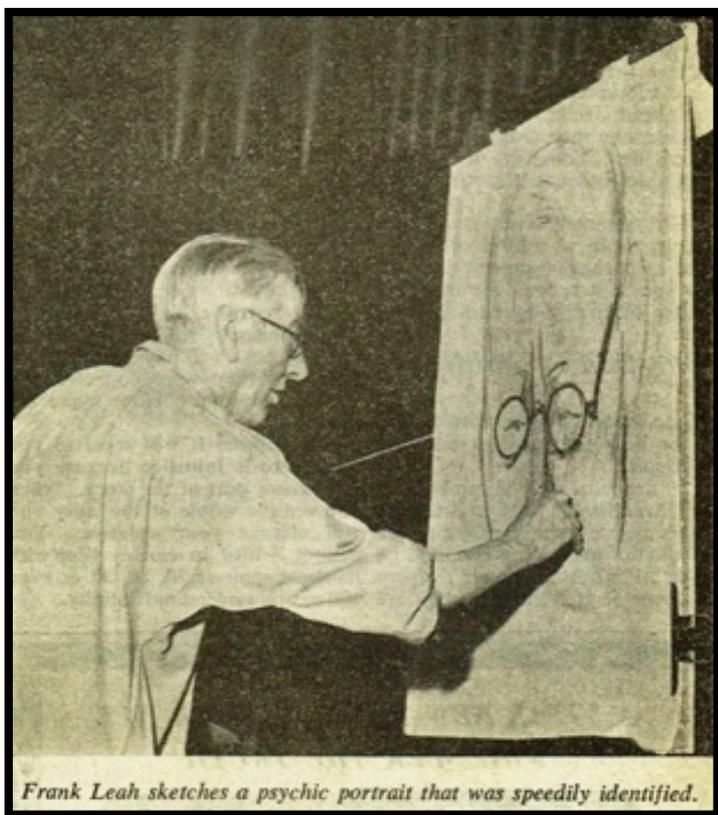

Miss Ward summarises her dramatic seance experience by saying: ‘This is a factual account of the return of my still living father and a sure proof of the thinness of the veil which separates us, the living, and the so-called dead. One cannot be other than astounded at Leah’s wonderful clairvoyance and the marvellous artistry, a combination that is unique.’

When is a psychic not a psychic?

A Curious Spirit Drawing

Not long after I was appointed Curator of the Britten Museum, I went down the cellar to the Museum storage room with an Arthur Findlay College tutor, psychic artist Lynn Cottrell. We found a curious framed drawing; on turning it over in a paper pocket Lynn said to me, "There is some information on the drawing. Oh, it's by Robert Cooper." I remarked that maybe the information was written by Cooper, as Cooper was not known as a medium!

But in fact this drawing was produced by the hand of Robert Cooper, so it is reported!

Cooper died on November 5th 1909, aged 90. He began his Spiritualist interests at Eastbourne, becoming a lecturer on Spiritualism, an author and starting the "Spiritual Times". He was an ardent worker for Spiritualism and he arranged the venues for Mrs Emma Hardinge Britten's arrival in England.

In 1874 James Morse visited America on a lecturing tour and a month later Cooper accompanied Morse on his travels as his companion. Cooper remained in America after Morse's departure a year later for five years, visiting many noted Spiritualists, arranging more lectures for Emma Hardinge Britten, visiting New York City and meeting Andrew Jackson Davis. It was when he was with James Morse in New York in 1875 that he met psychic artist Wella Anderson. Morse referred to him as a "spirit-photographer in pencil". Morse relates their visit to Anderson in his autobiography, "Leaves from my Life", published in 1877:

"Mr. Anderson was a wood-turner prior to becoming a drawing medium, and he was often disturbed by drawing figures against his will upon his work.

Occasionally he would, while asleep, spend the entire night, in drawing faces, figures, &c., until, finally, he commenced his career as a drawing-medium. Such, in substance, is his account of his development. We had quite a pleasant chat together, and Mr. Anderson afforded us a slight specimen of his power. He requested us to bandage his eyes. We did so, in a manner that completely blindfolded him; further, he then became entranced. While in the above condition he took a piece of cartridge paper, about 3in. by 2 1/2in., and drew a face on each side, the drawings being executed upside down; no hitch of faltering, but done as naturally as though he was in full possession of his normal sight."

It was at this time that Wella, under the alleged influence of the Italian painter, Raphael Sanzio, produced the original picture of Morse's chief control, "Tien Sien Tie", as shown. Cooper's work in the promotion of Spiritualism was indeed substantial but I have never seen a reference to his mediumistic faculties until the finding of the curious framed drawing.

So to the drawing:

CHAOS

Taken from the "Two Worlds" Xmas Supplement, December 12th, 1924:

WE have pleasure in presenting a spirit drawing which was executed through the hand of the late Mr. Robert Cooper, of London, who was so well known for his work in connection with the Marylebone Association. The drawing was done in ink in an incredibly short space of time, and in total darkness. Mr. C. J. Cooper sends us the following particulars in connection with it.

In years gone by it was no unusual thing for drawings, paintings, etc., to be produced in the dark, but such phenomena seems to be declining, probably owing to the modern suspicion of dark seances. Anyhow, we will allow Mr. Cooper to tell his own story:—

"In connection with the spirit drawing representing 'Chaos,' I think it as well to state the circumstances under which it was produced. My father, the late Robert Cooper, had some time previously become acquainted with J. H. Powell, the poet, who, when calling at our house one day, mentioned some very extraordinary things which he had witnessed at a seance when he was present at a Mrs. Marshall's, in London, and my father, who was at the time quite a materialist, was very much interested in what he was told, and subsequently paid Mrs. Marshall a visit, and was more than ever impressed by what he there witnessed. Seances were then conducted in our own home, and my eldest sister, then only a schoolgirl, developed the faculty of automatic writing. Through her mediumship some interesting and extraordinary messages were obtained, some in languages she knew nothing whatever about.

“Later on my father became very abnormal and informed us he was being controlled by his uncle, John Thomas Cooper, who was a celebrated chemist. He was the discoverer of the oxyhydrogen light, also of the process of enamelling as applied to articles of daily use: jugs, basins, etc. The subject of Spiritualism was, of course, little understood by any members of my father's family, and as his condition became apparently worse (he abstained from food for days together), it was arranged that I should be continually with him, as his condition was such that we deemed it necessary that he should not be left alone. During this time I slept in the same room with him, and it was then that the spirit drawings were produced.

“There was a table in the room on which, before retiring, would be placed a sheet of drawing paper, together with ink, pencils, etc., and he would say, ‘We'll see what the spirits will give us to-night,’ or words to that effect. Every night I would hear him get out of bed, go to the table, and then the sound of writing or drawing could be heard; then after a short time—ten minutes, may be—he would get back into bed, and in the morning the drawings would be there. I should say perhaps ten or a dozen pictures were produced in this way. A light was never at any time used, so I may consistently say they were produced in total darkness.

“This phase of things went on for nearly a fortnight, when by degrees his abnormal condition disappeared, and food was again taken. He still continued engrossed in the subject of Spiritualism, but no recurrence of this sort ever again appeared. The other drawings were all of a most exquisite character and design, but totally different to the one now exhibited.

(Signed) C. Ion COOPER.”<sup>7</sup>

Forgotten Pioneers:

MISS EDITH POTTS

In 1927 she was invited to the platform of the Glasgow Association and soon afterward became one of the most popular mediums touring Scotland under the auspices of the Scottish Council of the SNU.

Presently there is very little information available on this medium; the odd snippets I have found show that she was a fine evidential medium, working on occasions with two of our finest exponents bringing public awareness of Spiritualism, Hannan Swaffer and Maurice Barbanell. See Pioneer, Vol. 2, No. 6: "Maurice Barbanell, the S.N.U. and his Propaganda Work". This issue includes "On Tour with Hannan Swaffer – We Continue Our Crusade", by Maurice Barbanell.

SCOTTISH PROPAGANDA MEETINGS

CROWDED meetings on Sunday (March 4th) in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, and in the Music Hall, Edinburgh, were addressed by Mr. Hannan Swaffer and Mr. M. Barbanell.

Mr. Swaffer dealt with experiments at his own circle and stressed the great importance of home circles and the value of Spiritualism as a factor in daily life. Mr. Barbanell dealt pointedly with the recent dictum of the Archbishop of York, that it is positively undesirable to have experimental proof of Survival. He asked his hearers not to take other people's opinion on Spiritualism for or against, but to investigate for themselves.

Miss Edith Potts, of Gateshead, gave about twenty clairvoyant descriptions at the Glasgow meeting. Names and surnames were given, usually with accompanying message, and the responses by the recipients indicated in almost every case that the clairvoyance was of a very evidential nature. Mrs. Chanley, of Leeds, gave clairvoyance at the Edinburgh meeting, and it also was very evidential and met with general acceptance. Mr. J. B. McIndoe presided at both meetings.<sup>7</sup>

In 1927 psychic photographers William Hope and Mrs Buxton gave some group sittings at Rectory Hall, Gateshead National Spiritualist Church. In the glass slide printed here can be noted Mrs Potts and Miss Potts (right) in the front row. The extra enclosed an arched veil; this is sometimes referred to as the "psychic arch".<sup>8</sup>

The extra was claimed by Mrs Potts to be a member of her family.

<sup>6</sup> This was found on "The International Association for the Preservation of Spiritualist and Occult Periodicals" (IAPSOP), noted elsewhere in this issue, which highlights the importance of the availability of original materials.

Below is a short overview of the work of Edith Potts, as published in the Two Worlds, February 23rd, 1952:

ONE notable quality about the mediumship of Miss Potts of Gateshead, is that apart altogether from the content of her platform messages, her demonstrations usually have an exhilarating effect on the audience. This is largely due to the manner in which the messages are put over.

Miss Potts usually goes into trance, and the audience hear the naive and engaging commentaries of her youthful control. The control does not suffer from any kind of platform shyness, and her sometimes pointed and engagingly childish comments are always enjoyed. The commentaries frequently extend to the speaker who has preceded the medium, and who finds that his audience has been more extended than he had realised.

Miss Potts' mediumship began when she was a schoolgirl. Her earliest recollection relating to her psychic gifts brings up an episode when she was sitting in church with her parents. Her attention was centered on the lovely colours and forms which surrounded the minister in the pulpit. She also saw a form standing beside him as he preached his sermon. She naturally thought that the others in the church saw what she was seeing. One day, however, she spoke to her mother about the lovely things she had seen and then discovered that she was seeing differently from her mother and other people.

Her mother was naturally a little puzzled about her daughter. One day she happened to meet a Spiritualist and told her about the things her daughter described as seeing. The mother was asked to go to a Spiritualist meeting. Knowing nothing of the subject she went very reluctantly.

She was impressed and went a second time, taking her little daughter with her. To the latter the platform proceedings were no mystery. She also saw the people described, as well as colours surrounding different people in the church.

HER FIRST MESSAGE

This came to the knowledge of the President about what she saw. She told a lady who was present that she had a boy on crutches standing beside her, and the boy said it was his mother and that his name was Jimmy. The lady confirmed that this was a correct description of her son. This was Miss Potts first message from the other side. It was the beginning of a long career of clairvoyance.

Her first big demonstration was in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, when Mr. Hannen Swaffer was the speaker. This was in March 1928. She has appeared since then at numerous meetings with Mr. Swaffer and other leading exponents of Spiritualism, and has travelled all over the British Isles, giving clairvoyance in the churches and to psychic study organisations. She frequently appears at the Edinburgh Psychic College and is always sure of a large and sympathetic audience. "I have loved every moment of it," she says.

Miss Potts was very fortunate in her early adventures into psychic communication. Her mother gave her encouragement and was sympathetic and understanding. As soon as she assured herself that her daughter had this special faculty, she helped her all she could in its development. Miss Potts never required to sit in a development class. All her development took place at home. “Psychics” she says, “are born, not made”—although the latent faculty exists in many individuals without their knowing it.

There have been various developments of her mediumship and she has been inspired to attempt drawing. Some wonderful psychic drawings and compositions have been the result. Some of her later work in this direction has been done in ink, the control, being a Greek artist. She has no natural aptitude for drawing and had no training of any kind.

A PRIMA DONNA

One of her occasional controls was a famous vocalist. Sometimes Miss Potts’ clairvoyance has been interrupted whilst she has given a rendering of a song associated with the vocalist in question. Her singing is in a voice not at all like her own; it is a deep contra’ to—and the singing is marked by the effectiveness and artistic qualities of the expert.

In the early period of her mediumship, Miss Potts was accustomed to take the whole service for churches in the Northumberland and Durham districts. In 1927 she was invited to the platform of the Glasgow Association and soon afterward became one of the most popular mediums touring Scotland under the auspices of the Scottish Council of the S.N.U. At the time of her appearance at the large public meetings in Glasgow such demonstrations were looked upon with some misgiving by the older Spiritualists of the period. She performed her difficult task, however, with remarkable success and set their doubts at rest.

A message was given at an early public meeting to Mr. Hannen Swaffer from Sir H. Seagrave. Mr. Swaffer thought it was very evidential, and the autographed photograph of himself which he gave her as a mark of the occasion is one of her most prized possessions. Another of her early demonstrations was in 1929 when she gave clairvoyance at a meeting addressed by Messrs. Swaffer and Barbanell in Northampton. This was the first of many similar meetings which took place in almost every large town in the country, at which she appeared with prominent speakers.

J.W.H.

Editor’s note:

It may appear that she was more of an accredited artist than the article suggests:

There have been various developments of her mediumship and she has been inspired to attempt drawing. Some wonderful psychic drawings and compositions have been the result. Some of her later work in this direction has been done in ink, the control, being a Greek artist.

Possibly her psychic art became more pronounced after the date the article was written, as it notes: Some of her later work in this direction has been done in ink... The reason I note this is because some of her drawing was used in an art exhibition. Several letters are archived in the Britten Museum & Library, written to the then General Secretary Richard (Dick) Ellidge and featured recently in Pioneer, Vol. 6, No. 6: “This Man is the Mainspring of Organised Spiritualism”.

The correspondence shows that Edith Potts' drawings were exhibited at Bede Gallery, Jarrow in 1973. The Arts Council were offered the drawings to purchase but they decided against it. An art critic for the Manchester Guardian wrote;

... a very bad criticism of the drawings, saying they were just "doodles" comprising of jugs of flowers and leaves and purporting to be done by spirits as Rosemary Browns music was.

The letter writer notes: It was one big smear on Spiritualism and continues: We think he must have influenced the others from buying. However he was the only adverse critic... It was noted that another gentleman, connected to a London arts centre, was very keen to hold a Psychic Drawing Exhibition next year, so potentially the drawings were still on the market. The letter notes that, of course, the sale would be subject to Mr Higginson and the Committee; it was estimated that each drawing was worth £20 and it noted:

Naturally we think them priceless things which cannot be repeated but then she was an unknown artist.

It was arranged for the drawings to be returned to Stansted Hall at the end of October 1973. The drawings are sadly no longer at the Museum; it is not known what happened to them. This situation would certainly not arise today. They may possibly have been sold, as in 1973 the Arthur Findlay College was on the verge of being lost, being deeply in debt. The correspondence gives no indication as to how many drawings there were; the estimated £20 per drawing would today be equivalent to around £243.

It would not be until 1977 that "Stansted Hall Cleared of Debt": see Pioneer, Vol. 3, No. 4.

We do hold two prints of Edith Potts: the portrait as shown and one of her drawings.

MORE ON HAROLD SHARP

“Put colour at my disposal, and I will put myself at yours.”

Harold Sharp has previously been featured in Pioneer on two occasions, firstly in Vol. 1, No. 5,<sup>14</sup> and then in Vol. 5, No. 2.<sup>15</sup> Biographical information on Sharp has been limited. Pioneer has come across two later articles published below from the Two Worlds, July 26th, 1952.

These will add to what we know about Sharp's background, and a further sense of the unfoldment of his symbolic mediumship, which became more widely known as Auragraphs.

HAROLD SHARP'S AURAGRAPHS

Exhibition in London

An Exhibition of Auragraphs, held at Marylebone House by Mr. Harold Sharp provided a feast of colour and unusual design for the onlooker. Automatic drawings, one measuring as much as four and a half feet in length, were also on show.

For those ignorant of their meaning, and I must confess I was one, it must be explained what an auragraph is Circular in shape, and executed in pastels, the auragraph is a symbolic drawing of intricate design and tiny pictures, of the life and character of an individual. Certain colours represent certain aspects—for instance—red, the practical nature: blue, personality; black, grief, etc.

Mr. Harold Sharp, the medium for these beautiful drawings, has himself no normal knowledge of art. Indeed, drawing was apparently his worst subject at school, and he has had no training subsequently.

The artist is his Chinese guide, Chan Shih, who during his earth life was a metal engraver.

“While talking to the sitter.” explained Mr. Sharp, “my hand is seized by a warm tangible hand; the grip increases and guides my fingers executing the auragraph. When the drawing is completed, I then pass into a state of deep trance and Chan Shih speaks to the sitter, explaining the symbols.”

The medium has only been working in this way for eight years, yet his great gift was prophesied by a medium twenty-eight years ago! It was also promised that the auragraphs would travel to every country in the world and this also has come to pass.

Among the many exhibits were many intricate and colourful automatic drawings executed by Chan Shih, while Mr. Sharp was listening to classical music. These portrayed in visual form the pattern and colour of the musical vibrations.

One auragraph, interpreted by the medium during his lecture was a curious drawing of a complete pattern superimposed upon another complete pattern. This, in fact, belonged to a schizophrenic and was very symbolic of this peculiar state of mind.

The auragraph illustrated in this report was chosen by the medium for its clarity of line and symbol.

The interpretation is as follows: The sitter was a woman who had a phobia, amounting to obsession, that her relatives were going to compel her to have an operation. Under the operation, she was sure she was going to die, to be received after death by a fiendish devil. This devil is clearly shown by the red and black symbol rushing downwards, the five tails being the five fingers of the surgeon, encased in a rubber glove. Above is pictured a tree in blossom, even as the woman's life would blossom when she has rid her mind of the groundless fear.

During his lecture, which was in the nature of an explanation and history of his drawings Mr Harold Sharp gave a brief history of the guide Chan Shih. This guide was trained as a metal engraver, but longed to work with colour. When at the age of 33 he passed to spirit, he was able to study the subject of colour fully. He saw that his friends on earth trailed clouds of colour, in other words, auras. He then wished to teach others to use and understand the colour which surrounded them as a key to self-knowledge. After experimenting with an artist and finding himself frustrated in self-expression, Chan Shih decided to work through a sensitive who had no knowledge of art and therefore could not interfere with his plans.

The first attempt was made when the medium was talking to a friend on the phone. The same evening nine drawings followed, also while Sharp was talking. After eighteen months the medium heard a voice say, "Put colour at my disposal, and I will put myself at yours." After a time, the coloured drawings came, but always and only when the medium's mind was occupied.

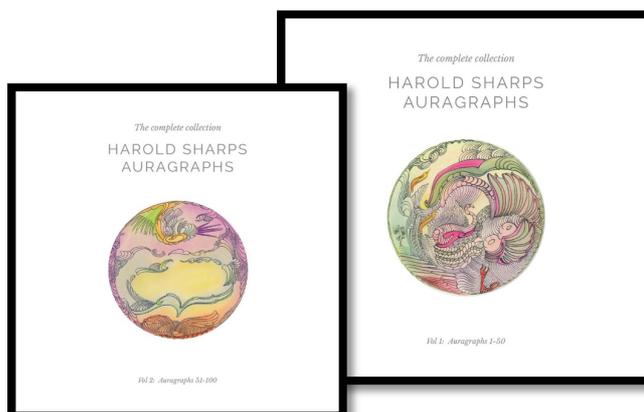

Beautiful as the drawings are, perhaps their greatest value lies in the great help given to sitters by Chan Shih as he explains the auragraphs. Defects in character are pointed out, fears revealed and dissipated and helpful advice gently given. In the words of his medium, Chan Shih is a "spiritual psychologist" and we have great need of such in our world to-day.

Profile - Harold Sharp

Story by PHILIP PAUL

MODERN Psychiatry embraces a technique which is aimed at achieving revelations from patients in response to key words uttered by the practitioner. For example, if all is well, the word “bread” will produce “butter,” “up” will be answered with “down” and so on.

So here is a tip for any psychiatrist who finds himself with a Spiritualist for a patient. Let him, at the appropriate moment, say the word “auragraph.” If all is as it should be, the patient will respond “Harold Sharp.”

Born on his father’s Leicestershire farm, Harold was the first of three children. A second son arrived when he was 12 and a daughter was born ten years later.

The loneliness of his childhood—he had few playmates in his early years—made Harold a thoughtful infant. The animals of farm and field were his friends and the flowers of the hedgerows his delight.

Thought it was measles

The first sign of his psychic faculties—he attributes them to his Scottish forefathers—was mistaken by his mother for an attack of measles !

But, years later, one of the world’s most famous mediums, Eileen Garrett, confirmed the reality of that early encounter when she described how, in his childhood, an old monk had watched at his bedside.<sup>16</sup>

Playing in a stack-yard one morning, he was called in to breakfast and exclaimed, “Mother, Granny’s dead.” This information earned him a hasty scolding but, of course, he was right. His grandmother had died that day in Rugby, of a heart attack.

Harold’s contact with Spiritualism began in London—at the premises of the College of Psychic Science.

Then came 18 months in a monastery. “But instead of hair shirts and scourges there were all sorts of annoying, petty restrictions I soon found I had no vocation there.”

Medium was right

In a Southend Spiritualist church, a medium, Margaret Vivian, told him he would be going abroad.<sup>17</sup> He shook his head dubiously—“There must be some mistake.” A few weeks later, he was in Russia.

Visits to Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, Kharkov and Yalta convinced him that he was witnessing “an attempt to put the kingdom of God on earth in deeds, not words.” Ever since those days, in 1933, he has been undeviating in his advocacy of a “fair deal for Russia.”

Once, his membership of the Society of Socialist Clergy and Ministers brought him into contact with a parson who inquired, “Are you one of us?” “No,” said Harold, “not really, because I am Spiritualist” !

Amused by his companion’s outraged exclamation, he asked the clergyman what he knew about Spiritualism. “Nothing,” confessed his companion, “except that I always advise my parishioners to have nothing to do with it!”

But Harold had his own back. A few days later, at the minister’s invitation, his parishioners were listening to a Harold Sharp talk under the title, “Why I am a Spiritualist!”

The coming of his auragraphs was foretold by a medium. Again he was unable to believe the information given him, for he disliked drawing and had no ability. Twenty years later, however, his hand was “seized by some power, and nine intricate and detailed drawings came through in one evening.”

The guide for this work, says Sharp, is a Chinese. He has some basis for this belief—as a result of a chance encounter on a train. Journeying to Belfast, he was unable to follow his usual habit of reserving a seat in a non-smoking compartment. Settled for the journey, he found he had a single companion in his compartment—a man who, presently, leaned across and asked him whether he was a Christian.

His questioner proved to be the Chinese Anglican Bishop of Fukien. Harold told him he was a Spiritualist and mentioned the auragraphs. His fellow-traveller asked if he might see some of the work. Harold took some examples from his case. Showing obvious delight, the bishop proceeded to explain the Chinese symbolism they portrayed!

As well as his Russian travels, Harold has worked in Denmark, Sweden and France. He announces his ambition as “a desire to improve the literature of the movement. So much of it makes a serious subject seem silly.”

During his execution of auragraphs, he feels a control “almost like a glove in my hand.” He finds it necessary to keep in constant conversation with sitters so that his mind is never on the drawing.

Reason for arrows

Once, he was asked by an anonymous applicant to provide her with an auragraph sitting at her hotel. To his consternation, the drawing showed broad arrows, prison bars and scales of justice. But later, the sitter told him she had suffered incarceration as a militant suffragette.

Harold looks back upon 30 years of “ordinary mediumship” (his own phrase). The auragraphs began in 1939. He is proud of the names that have passed through his developing circle — among others, Marcel Poncin, Mrs. Drayton Thomas, Mary Flanders and Rebecca Williams.

Next to auragraphs, Harold Sharp means herbs. Here, he attributes all his knowledge to his guide, Brother Peter. When he was seven, Harold fell over a cliff and suffered severe bruises. Clairaudiently, Brother Peter told him to pulverise daisy leaves and rub them on his wounds. Harold did so. Next day, all his bruises were gone.
